An Arab Caravan. Both for the sake of protection and for expert guidance, travellers crossing the vast deserts of Egypt and Northern Africa travel as much as possible in company. These bands, or caravans as they are called, traverse the desert, using certain well-known routes, and guided on their path by Arabs who have been born and bred in the desert. Camels, owing to the construction of their feet and their ability to go without water for long periods, are the invariable means of locomotion across these vast sandy wastes.
